True Heroism

The following anecdote, extracted WOLFERSBERFER, from unpublished memoirs of a French nobleman, may, it is hoped, serve as an example, well worthy of being imitated by all who desire to be thought truly brave and courageous. It records an instance of a victory ma gained by a man over his own passion -victory more glorious, more hon- BUILDING orable than any that has ever been purchased with fire and sword, with devastation and bloodshed. The noblemen, the Marquis de Valaise and the Count de Meric, were FLOORING, educated under the same masters, and were regarded by all who knew them as patterns of friendship, honor and and no quarred had ever disgraced their attachment, when one unfortunate evening, the two friends, having indulged rather freely in some excellent burgundy, repaired to a neighboring hotel, and engaged in a game of backgammon. Fortune declared herself in favor of the marquis; he won every game, and in the thoughtless glee of the moment, laughed with exultation at his unusual good luck. The count lost his temper and once or twice upbraided the marquis for enjoving the pain which he had excited in the bosom of his friend. At last, opon another fortunate throw made by the marquis, by which he gammoned his antagonist, the infuriated count threw the box and dice in the face of his brother soldier.
